THURSDAY EVENING, APRIL 18.

SPANISH CHARACTERISTICS.—A French journalist, writing his experience of his recent visit to Madrid to witness the Royal marriage, says: "It is worth going to the capital if only to experience the joy of returning to this. It appears, on the whole, that Spanish ladies are of surpassing beauty, and Spanish gentlemen of matchless ugliness, which is relieved only by their decorations. The pleasure people have so much diamonds, jewelry, purple and fine linen, that if they only took it into their heads to sacrifice some of these on the altar of their country, they could secure a unanimous vote of thanks from sipping bondholders. Everything is grand in Spain, even to the garrets, whose occupants, however, have the right to receive their friends in a common and stately furnished room. The ladies are further remarkable for their sobriety, and their good looks are owing to their living largely on water, sweetmeats and fruits. Goddesses were vegetarians. The King is pitted for the great excursions made on his time, at what Balzac calls the "inflammatory epoch of matrimonial life." It is predicted that the gray mare will prove the better horse. The King is even better than his mustache "pushes" his whiskers grow; his nose is excessively Bourbonian, his mouth large and open. In speaking he keeps his head down like Napoleon III.
